PART FIRST.

SYNOPSIS.

And lo! it came to pass that the braves of Chief Chicataubut, lying in wait by the banks of the rushing waters of Dry Pond, ambushed a strolling company of players.

Whereupon, a young man, called from his agility Leaping Legs, was despatched in haste with the tidings to Chicataubut, who called the Chiefs of the tribe and the Medicine Men together in council, and ordered that the captives be brought before him.

And they did so mightily amuse the Chief and his warriors that the pipe of peace was smoked with great solemnity, and they lived happily ever afterwards.

Quod Erat Demonstrandum

The scene opens with the captives attempting to amuse the tribe with their songs and byplays.
